A COLLEGE WHERE YOU DEVELOP AS AN INDIVIDUAL

Where the personal interests and abilities of each individual student are developed under the guidance of professors who believe that knowledge must serve the individual.

Whether you like to go fishing, pick water-lilies or just row around among the cypresses, Cross Lake in Shreveport is the place to go.

Some students read the inscriptions on the new Atkins Memorial entrance; some use it as a meeting place; but everyone passes through it on entering the campus. In the spring, azaleas bloom along the wide drives leading to the entrance.

It's easier to know your professors in the small Centenary classes. You learn more thoroughly, too, in the informal discussions which follow lectures. This class has moved out-of-doors to enjoy the fine day.

Rotary Hall, dormitory for co-eds from out of town, is homelike with comfortable reception rooms and a hostess who takes an interest in each girl.

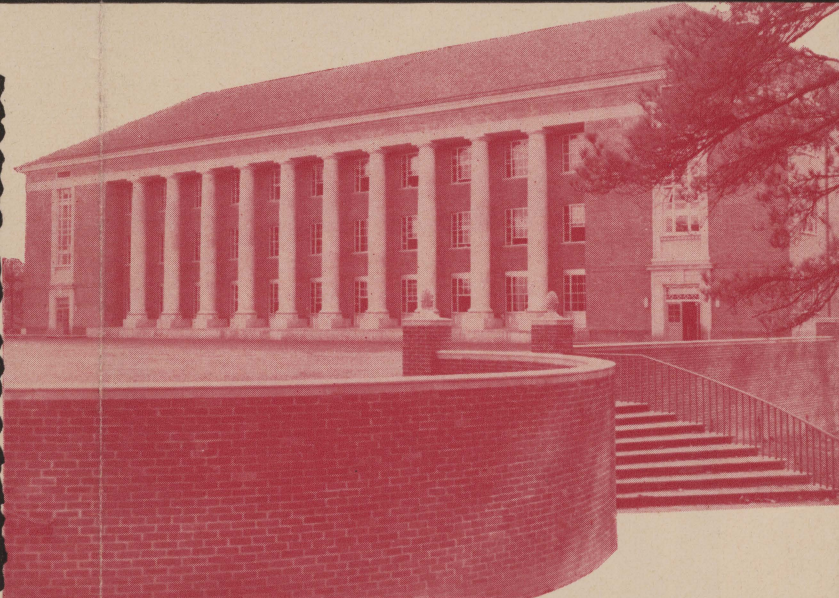

Jackson Hall was recently remodeled to include classrooms; the library, with informal reading lounge and music room; the art department; the home economics department and the foreign language laboratory.

These home economics students are learning to refinish old furniture as part of their training in home decorating.

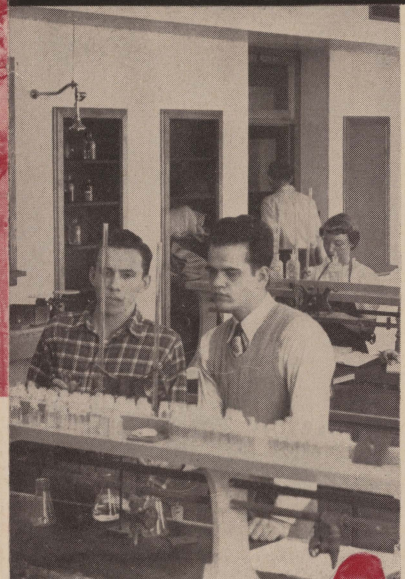

Centenary is an accredited four-year liberal arts college, offering the degrees of Bachelor of Arts, Bachelor of Science and Bachelor of Music. At Centenary you will find students and professors who take an interest in you as an individual. In your studies, in your outside activities and in your social life, you will receive the personal attention which helps you develop as an individual.

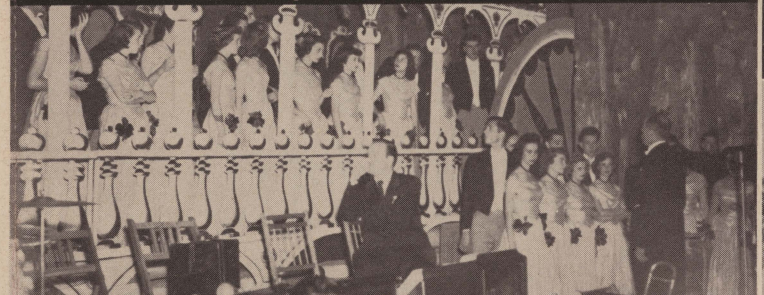

The new million-dollar Science Hall has the most modern facilities for scientific laboratory work and instruction.

You not only learn how to live—you learn how to make a living. Laboratories in the new million-dollar Science Hall are equipped to train future doctors, engineers and scientists in a wide variety of fields. There are complete business courses, too, for future business men and women.

Everyone at Centenary likes music, whether it's long haired or short haired. Here Jimmy Dorsey has the home-coming crowd sitting it out just to listen to his slow swing.

You've probably heard or heard about the nationally famous Centenary Choir. Here it is preparing for a deep South number at the "Holiday in Dixie" Cotillion.

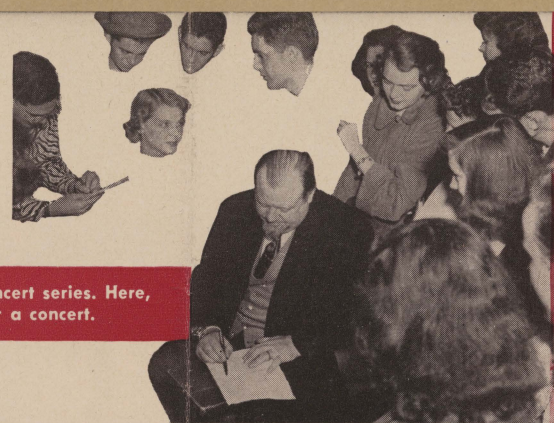

In the Arts Building are the offices of the president and the administrative staff.

The Physical Education Building is the center of intramural sports and intercollegiate athletics.

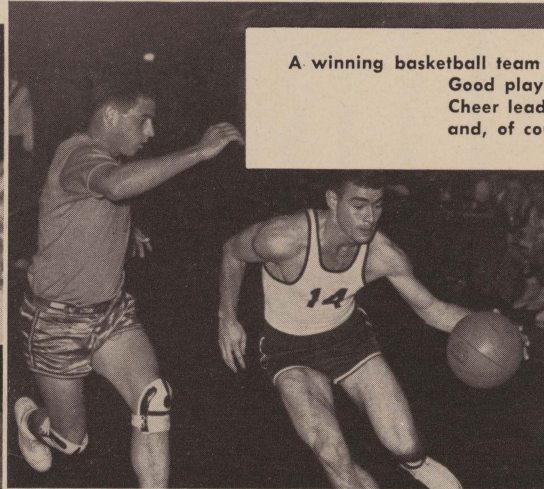

If you like the big drums and brass, you will enjoy going out for the band.

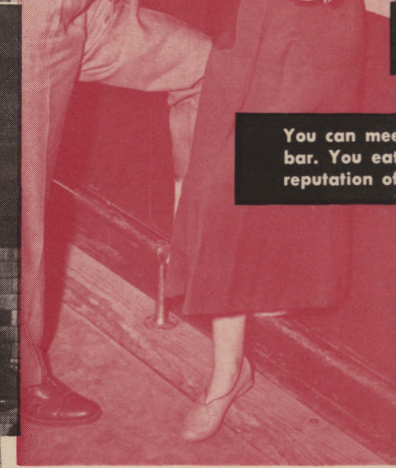

Symphonies or folk songs—you will hear both in the concert series. Here, Burl Ives autographs programs for his student fans after a concert.

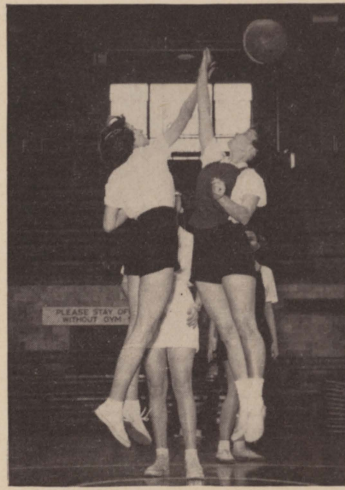

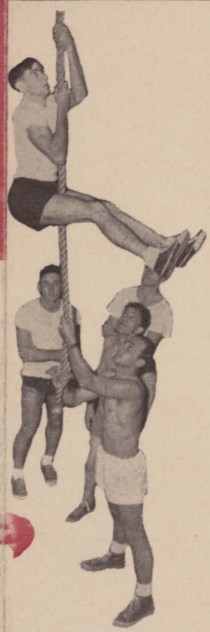

If you have a craving for the smell of grease paint, you will like acting in productions of the drama department.

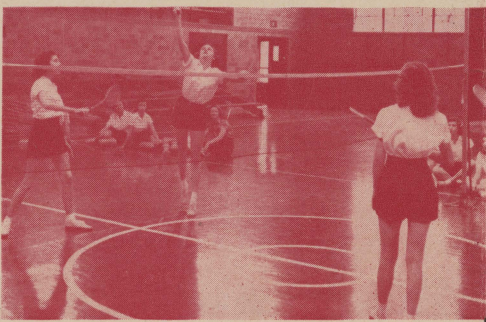

A winning basketball team needs:
Good players
Cheer leaders
and, of course, the team's sweetheart.

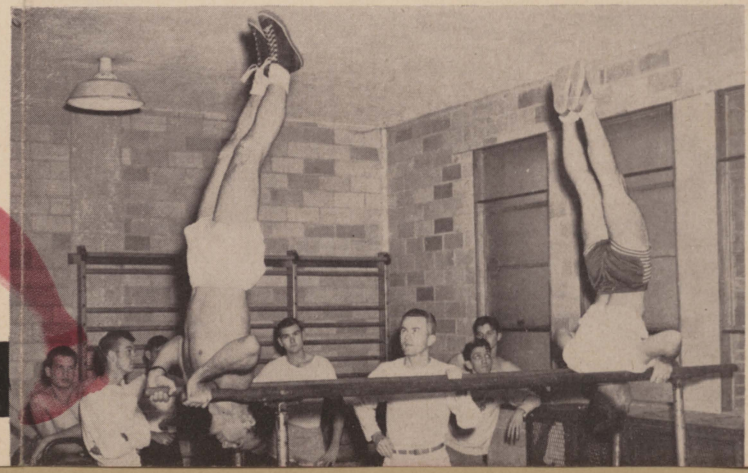

You can meet your friends and have a sandwich and soda at the snack bar. You eat your regular meals at the college cafeteria, which has the reputation of being one of the best eating places in Shreveport.

Fraternities and sororities have their own homes on the campus for meetings and social affairs. Through these organizations and many others, students get to know each other better. Young members are helped by the older members to adapt themselves to campus life.

You will be "on the team" in college intra-murals. Each student receives individual training in health and physical education.

The classroom isn't the only place to learn. Groups of students are frequently invited to professors' homes to discuss favorite subjects, to share hobbies or just to have fun.

Dates start and end in the parlors of the women's dormitory. Hostesses make the dormitories seem more like home by helping with the planning of social events.

The Christian religion is emphasized in every phase of campus life. There are five denominational organizations on the campus which hold regular religious services.
